Dear Dr Smith,

Bedside functional review

I reviewed Jane at the facility today because she has been asking for someone to remain beside her when walking to meals. This was a brief bedside safety review rather than the full therapy session planned for 12 November. Her usual function is walking with her frame to communal meals and eating independently.

Jane described feeling light-headed after standing and said she was less confident about walking to breakfast. I observed one sit-to-stand from her usual chair: she used the armrests and completed the transfer with close guarding, without an observed loss of balance during that transfer. When she reported light-headedness in standing, I returned her to sitting and did not proceed with walking-distance or timed balance testing.

Functional task	Observation today
Sit-to-stand	Armrests used; close guarding for one observed transfer.
Walking / balance tests	Deferred after reported light-headedness.
Usual aid	Frame, as recorded in the established care plan.

The assessment is currently limited by light-headedness. No exercise progression was attempted; the immediate focus is safe participation while the medical team assesses the symptoms and recent blood results.

Recommendations

1. Continue the recorded frame and provide close staff support for transfers and short essential walks according to Jane's presentation. Stop the activity and seek nursing assistance if she becomes light-headed.

2. Defer progression of balance work or walking endurance until the medical team has assessed the dizziness and new results.

3. Review the assistance plan with nursing staff following medical assessment. Retain the 12 November physiotherapy appointment for reassessment if Jane is able to participate safely.

I will reassess Jane's mobility and goals after medical review.

Yours sincerely,
Sarah Green
